CITY TO AID IN FLAG DAY

"LET'S DO IT RIGHT," URGES MAYOR.

ISSUES PROCLAMATION

All Maryville Citizens Urged to Participate in Program on Courthouse Lawn Next Tuesday.

"If we are going into this thing at all, let's do it right," Mayor W. O. Garrett said this morning when he announced that the city would aid in the Flag Day exercises next Tuesday on the courthouse yard.

Under the present arrangements, the exercises will be held on the west side of the courthouse. The city will see that the street on the west side of the courthouse is roped off during the program, Mayor Garrett said. However, the officers will arrange to allow vehicles to park on the west side of the courthouse in which elderly and infirm persons wish to sit and hear the program. Otherwise the street will be blocked to parking and traffic.

Mayor Garrett said he wished every household and every business house in the city would display the flag on Tuesday. The Mayor hopes that all who can participate in the program. If only as an observer and auditor, will do so.

Clun Price, exalted ruler of the Elks lodge, said today that the Flag Day exercises will be held at 8 o'clock Tuesday night. The program will be given by the Elks in conjunction with the State Teachers College. The College will furnish a band and other music.

"Fellow townsmen: In view of June 14 being set aside by President Coolidge and Governor Baker to commemorate the birthday of our Flag 150 years ago, I hereby proclaim that this day be observed in Maryville.

"Because the Stars and Stripes are a symbol of our liberty and happiness, I trust that every home and business house in Maryville will display the American flag next Tuesday and that the Flag Day exercises to be conducted by the Elks on the courthouse lawn be participated in by each and everyone in a spirit of loyalty and reverence.

"Signed,

"W. O. GARRETT,

"Mayor and City Manager."

Jefferson City, June 10.—In a proclamation issued yesterday, Governor Baker designates Tuesday, June 14, as "Flag Day." The governor says:

"It is a symbol of freedom and truth; of strength, bravery, justice, happiness, loyalty and liberty. Every day of the 365 should be Flag Day, but, conforming to a custom, as well as an act of congress designating this particular day as Flag Day, I hereby am issuing this proclamation, trusting the people of the state will observe it in letter and spirit."

THEY DIDN'T MEAN MAYBE

COUNCILMEN PASS ANOTHER SIDEWALK ORDINANCE.

IN BUSINESS SECTION

132 Feet on West Fourth Street Barricaded as Unsafe.—City Threatened With Suits, Mayor Says.

The city council was in earnest Wednesday when it announced that proceedings would be instituted to have unsafe sidewalks repaired.

Meeting in special session last night, the council passed an emergency ordinance condemning the sidewalk on the north side of West Fourth, from the alleyway on the west side of the Tribune Building, west to Buchanan street, declaring it to be unsafe and dangerous to pedestrians.

The ordinance ordered that portion of the sidewalk in the block between Buchanan and Main streets to be barricaded, which was done this morning by Mayor W. O. Garrett. The sidewalk abutts property owned by Richard Kuchs and Adolph Lippman, the sidewalk extending for 132 feet. Mr. Lippman owns the east half and Mr. Kuchs the west half, according to the tax books.

A fence was placed along the sidewalk this morning with "no parking" signs in plain view and will stand there until Saturday, when the council will meet again to pass an ordinance providing for the sidewalk to be repaired unless repairs are started by the property owners by that time.

The ordinance was declared to be an emergency one and went into effect immediately upon its passage last night.

It declares that the council finds the sidewalk in such a condition that it is unsafe for public travel and or-

PROGRESS IN FARM WORK

WEATHER FAVORABLE IN COUNTY THIS WEEK.

HEAD BLUEGRASS CROP

Many Persons Now Employed in Comparatively New Industry Here—Much Corn Replanted.

"The weather for the past week has been quite favorable and the farmers have made considerable progress," writes O. G. Null, Pickering correspondent of The Democrat-Forum. Continuing Mr. Null says:

"The first planting of corn is practically completed. A great deal of replanting is being done this week on account of damage done by cut worms.

"Alsaffa and sweet clover are being cut for hay and the bluegrass harvest is begun. A number of strippers will be in operation for the next ten days if the weather is favorable. The blue grass seed crop is of fine quality and large quantity."

The Barnard Bulletin reports that bluegrass heading is under way this week and many from that community will be working early and late to take care of a large yield of seed for the next ten days. The Bulletin says Earl McCleave left for South Missouri and started to head a week ago last Tuesday. Eaton & McHaffey plan to start the last of the week near Kansas City. Archie Hubbell, Ollie Breit and Charles Buie will each have a crew of headers working within a few days in Iowa. Many of the farmers will head their own bluegrass.

Good Quality and Plentiful.

The seed this year is of good quality and will be plentiful. The bluegrass industry has made bluegrass pastures profitable in the past few years and has furnished work for all who wish a job. The industry brings in thousands of dollars that formerly was not considered.

Harve Hardin of Maitland has about forty-five strippers at work gathering bluegrass seed at the Bilby ranch near Quitman this week. The Maitland Herald says:

"Talk of prices is all guesswork now, as buyers have apparently done nothing definite. The crop here is said to be good, but rather light in Kentucky. Most guesses on prices are around a dollar, compared with a dollar to a dollar and a quarter last year."

Bilby Has Vast Crop

According to the Albany Ledger, about thirty-five teams and drivers left Albany Friday and Saturday bound for the vast acres of bluegrass west of Maryville on the Bilby ranches. The crop there this year has been leased by a Mr. Hardin, of Maitland and the headers will take the seed from ten thousand to fifteen thousand acres.

"The grass stalks this year are laden heavily with the precious seed and those who are in a position to observe and know say that an unprecedented harvest is probable," the Ledger says.

"The men will be gone about two weeks or perhaps a little longer. The seed must be gathered quickly and usually the season closes within that time. The men who left here did not take their headers, those will be furnished when they arrive at their destination. The trip by horses will take about two days, averaging from thirty to fourty mile a day."

TO BUY NEW PAINTING

Second Work of Art to Be Given School —Other Groups Organize for Other Activities.

Miss Maye Sturm of Maryville was elected president of the senior class at the State Teachers College at a meeting held this morning.

Cecil Jenkins, Savannah, was elected vice-president, and Miss Louie Youngman, of Bethany is secretary.

The seniors voted today to present the school with another painting, one by Birger Sandzen, nationally known artist of St. Mary's, Kan. The class already has presented one painting to the school, "Unconquered," by Delle Miller. A committee, working with Miss Olive DeLuce of the College art department, will make the new selection and it will be announced later.

The class decided to continue its social activities throughout the summer, and a committee headed by Miss Dora B. Scheffsky was appointed to carry on this work.

Other Organizations Meet.

Several organizations held their weekly meetings at the College this morning during the off period. Due to the short summer quarter, it is necessary that classes meet five times a week, but the period beginning at 10:15 a. m., is set aside for activities each day. On Tuesday, the period is reserved for religious organizations, and on Wednesday for the weekly assembly. Organizations meet at this hour on the other days of the week.

At the regular assembly of the High School Department at the College, group singing was led by Floyd Lunsford, a College student. Miss Ruby Norris played a piano solo. Then the routine business was taken up. The officers of the High School Department were elected at the last meeting. They are: President, George Hargrave, vice-president, Irvin Bartram; treasurer, Beverly Martin; secretary, Ruby Norris; rpeorter, Delberta Mutz; and sargeant-at-arms, Brice Rickard.

Miss Anthony Talks.

Miss Hettie Anthony, head of the home economics department, talked to the Kappa Omicron Phi's at their meeting today. Miss Anthony told of her trip to Tucson, Ariz., to help install the Eta chapter of the Kappa Omicron Phi sorority, and to Canyon, Tex., where she helped install the Zeta chapter of the same organization. Miss Anthony is one of the national officers of the organization. Other business was discussed.

At the meeting of the Mathematics and Science Club, the following officers were elected: President, Sam Urban; vice-president, Jesse Michaelson; secretary-treasurer, Miss Lucille Knecht; sergeant-at-arms, Miss Lois Roper. There are twenty-two members in the club this summer.

The Pi Omega Pi, commercial fraternity elected officers this morning. Clun Wilson retained his position as president of the organization and George Newman was elected vice-president and Miss Ludema Tannehill, treasurer. Plans and activities for the summer were discussed, and it was decided that the organization have a picnic some time next week. The exact place and date will be announced later.

SCHOOL CASE BEFORE COURT

SKIDMORE TESTIMONY PROBABLY WILL CONTINUE TOMORROW.

OBJECTORS VOTED OUT

Purpose of Boundary Change Was to Eject Bond Issue Opponents, Secretary of Board Admits.

The proposal to cut out an irregular tract of land, comprising the Liberty school district and other adjoining lands, from the Skidmore Consolidated school district, was made with a view to eliminating voters who might be opposed to a bond issue to build a new school in Skidmore.

This was the substance of the testimony this afternoon in circuit court by W. G. Reynolds, secretary of the Skidmore school board, who was the first witness in the hearing to determine whether a temporary injunction should be made permanent.

On May 26 Judge John M. Dawson, who was presiding today, granted a temporary injunction, which halted a proposed election on May 28 when the question of voting on a $75,000 bond issue was to have come up. The temporary injunction placed the Skidmore district in the same position it was before about 1,600 acres, south and southeast of Skidmore were voted out of the district by the Skidmore voters and later confirmed by a board of arbitration, appointed as the result of the Graham district's refusal to accept the territory.

Mr. Reynolds was among some thirty or thirty-five witnesses subpoenaed to appear today to testify in the hearing. Leslie G. Somerville, county superintendent of schools, was called from Columbia for the hearing.

Judge A. M. Tibbels of Mound City and Fred Harvey of Maryville were the attorneys for the petitioners, who are Vern B. Ward, J. F. Kellogg, William Taylor, Fred M. Barrett, John R. Barrett and Elmer Owens. Randall Wilson of Bethany and L. C. Cook of Maryville were representing the school board of Skidmore.

The Graham school board, named as joint defendant in the suit, today entered appearance in writing and asked to be discharged, stating it would abide by any decision the court might make.

Mr. Reynolds testified that a petition was filed with the Skidmore school board to have the boundary of the district changed, soon after the election February 26, when bonds for a $75,000 school were defeated.

His record of the schooi board meetings was introduced into the record, showing that the petition was filed and judges named for an election on the proposed boundary changes. Mr. Reynolds said that he was one of the men who had arranged the draft for the petition asking for the change. It was made with the purpose of excluding those who had been opposed to a bond issue, Mr. Reynolds declared.

With the number of witness subpoenaed, the hearing undoubtedly will continue over until tomorrow.

The defendants in the hearing filed an answer to the petitioners for the injunction, denying all the allegations set forth, which included statements that the proceedings for an election to change the boundaries were illegal and that it was the purpose to disfranchise fifty voters in the Skidmore school district. It asks that the temporary injunction be dissolved and costs of the hearing be assessed against the petitioners, who have filed a $1,000 bond.

Many Telegrams to Lindbergh Expected

Flier Will Acknowledge Receipt With Postcard, It Is Announced.—To Keep Office Here Open.

The telegraph pep message "fan" is offered another chance on the arrival of Col. Charles Lindbergh at Washington tomorrow. C. W. Payne, local manager for the Western Union Telegraph Co., has been instructed to keep his office open to facilitate the handling of any telegrams which may be filed for delivery to the flier.

Colonel Lindbergh, the company announces, will acknowledge receipts of all telegrams received with a souvenir postcard with the following message: "Sincere thanks for your generous expression of appreciation of my flight, New York to Paris, May 20 to 21, 1927."

The card will have a photographed reproduction of Lindbergh's personal signature, and also a picture showing the statue of Liberty on the left and the Eiffel Tower in Paris on the right, with a picture of the ocean between and an airplan flying in the center.

The telegraph company is preparing to handle a large number of messages, as it expects people will want to honor the flier and at the same time to get the coveted souvenir.

Mr. Coolidge expressed sympathy with the purposes of the delegation and said that as soon as army engineers had completed their survey he would be glad to submit their report to the delegates for consideration.

Miss Dawn McComb of Wilcox is visiting in Maryville.

MOTHER OF A HERO ARRIVES

MRS. LINDBERGH TO WASHINGINGTON IN WHITE HOUSE CAR.

STOPS AT BALTIMORE

Showing Flier's Trait of Modesty, She Tries to Evade Public Attention But Fails.

New York, June 10.—The following list of radio stations in the Middle West will engage in the broadcasting of the Lindbergh welcoming ceremonies at Washington tomorrow afternoon and evening.

KMOX, St. Louis; WOC, Davenport; WHO, Des Moines; and WDAF, Kansas City.

Washington, June 10.—Mrs. Evangeline Lindbergh, mother of the famous flier, will arrive in a White House automobile from Baltimore, Md., this afternoon.

True to the modesty and retiring nature which she and her son have shown through days of world admiration, Mrs. Lindbergh sought to avoid publicity.

In doing this, she tried to hide by alighting at a Baltimore suburb. A railroad detective and newspapermen spoiled her plans. The President learned of her whereabouts and offered her transportation.

Over the week-end, the retiring Detroit mother can live in the glory of the throngs, who, like herself, worship Charles Lindbergh.

Contrast With Former Life.

The surroundings of the beautiful marble home of the Coolidges will vary greatly from the surroundings Mrs. Lindbergh knew as the wife of a hard working Minnesota congressman.

Her husband was known in political life as too liberal and came to know the bitterness that Washington's political life engenders.

But today and tomorrow, a President will pay her honor of public praise and private hospitality. Many a congressman's wife will envy her.

But Mrs. Lindbergh seeks no social glory. It is glory enough for her that she is the mother of Charles Lindberg.

Washington, June 10.—Charles Lindbergh, colonel and ambassador, whose homecoming has started one of the greatest hero welcomes in history, will take a few minutes from the crowd to thank the representatives of France, Belgium and Great Britain for his enthusiastic reception over there.

Military and police authorities expressed doubt that the calls could be made in safety if the great crowds knew of the plans. They feared that the too enthusiastic crowds might surge forward and crush him if his program allows for a single stop as he rides about the capital from one to another of the score of functions already planned.

High Stacks of Mail.

Washington, June 10.—Estimates of telegrams for Charles Lindbergh today reached as high as 250,000. Estimates of letters reached as high as 1,000,000. The letters, filling several mail trucks, will be formally delivered tomorrow. More than $5,000 in donations is included in the several sacks of registered mail.

Butter From Home Town.

Washington, June 10.—Butter flown by plane from his home-town by a boyhood friend will grace the table of Charles Lindbergh at the temporary White House over the week-end.

Lindbergh Company Planned in St. Louis

$500,000 Concern for Manufacture of Airplanes, With Flier as President, Is Proposed.

St. Louis, June 10.—A plan to organize a $500,000 airplane manufacturing company here and place Colonel Lindbergh in charge as president was announced today by Earl Thompson a backer of Lindbergh's transatlantic flight.

"The only way to keep Lindbergh in St. Louis is to give him a chance to advance aviation," said Thompson. "My plan, which is approved by outstanding St. Louis business men and capitalists, is to organize a manufacturing company."

Weather

Partly cloudy today and Saturday; cooler today in north portion.

SLOGANS.

"Even the most widely advertised slogans mean nothing to the general public," maintains a rebellious advertising man. He made up a list of 50 of the best advertised commercial slogans and tried them on a group of profession advertising men. Their average standing in this test was only about 50 per cent—they recognized only half of the supposedly famous slogans. That being the case, how many would the ordinary citizen recognize?

Take the first ten of that list, for a sample:

1. Ask Dad—He Knows.
2. Ask the Man Who Owns One.
3. Best in the Long Run.
4. Built for Sleep.
5. Candy Mint With the Hole.
6. Chases Dirt.
7. A Clean Tooth Never Decays.
8. Clean As It Polishes.
9. Cocoa With That Chocolate Taste.
10. Covers the Earth.

All right—how many do you know? As many as one-fourth?

Most of the slogans are familiar to newspaper and magazine readers, if they read the ads. But also most of them are not associated with one brand of goods any more than other brands. Some are complimentary to all goods in a certain line, some might be applied to almost anything.

The ideal slogan would be clearly identified with one article rather than any other. Also the ideal slogan seldom comes except by inspiration.

Undoubtedly the slogan business has been greatly overdone, by manufacturers, merchants and communities. Eventually the nation may recover from this odd delusion that everything and everybody has to have a slogan, and goods can't be sold or organized work done without one.

Only the dyspeptic can eat his cake and still feel that he has it.—Hannibal Courier-Post.

Nature ain't so grand. She gives nice children to lots of people who haven't sense enough to raise them right.—San Francisco Chronicle.

HOLDING THE DIKE.

Know State, Use Missouri's Products, Urges Geo. A. Pickens

"Looting the King's Treasure House" was the subject of a radio address given Wednesday night from Station WOS, Jefferson City, by George A. Pickens, former secretary of the Maryville Chamber of Commerce, now general secretary of the Missouri Association "for a Greater Missouri."

Mr. Pickens' address follows:

"Ever since the first cave man digged at the roots of primeval vegetation for bulbous growths to satisfy his hunger, the fecund soil has furnished man his sustenance without stint, other than the physical effort necessary to convert it to his needs. But centuries before primitive man had tilled the soil with any sort of human intelligence, seeds of vegetable life so that coming races of men might survive and find nourishment for his body.

"Marvelous has been the development down through the endless cycles of time to the present day and yet, man, with his ingenious mind, is only beginning to fathom the benefits to come from nature's great mastery box—the good brown earth—when all of the wizardry of scientific research as applied to practical tilling of the soil shall have been adapted to his uses.

"Mother nature has been especially prodigal in her distribution of favors in our own state of Missouri. She has alloted us a diversity of richness of resources scarcely equaled by any other state; she has opened her bosom to the bland sunshine and the summer rains, thus making the most remote sections to bear richly of fruit, grains and vegetable. She has traced abundant waterways between our wooded hills and through fertile valleys so that the upland orchards or the grainfields of the lower levels are plentifully refreshed.

All Land Good For Something.

"Every inch of Missouri soil is good for something. Scientific farming as taught by our exeellent agricultural schools and colleges, is demonstrating that fact. The day of 'hit or miss' farming in Missouri is practically a thing of the past. Soil surveys and soil experimentation have taught us that the proper crops, selected with a view to the suitability of the soil, are dollar pullers, while the old 'hit or miss' plan which usually meant planting the same crops father did, makes lean pocketbooks and much disappointment for the farmer.

"One of the great mysteries is why we Missourians depend so much upon other localities to furnish commodities that may as well be grown at home. I went into a grocery store the other day to buy a small head of cabbage; after selecting a small one, slightly larger than my two fists, I was bowled over when the clerk stated that the price would be twenty-five cents. The explanation was that the 'cabbage patch of the nation' which is also called the 'sugar-bowl of the nation,' down in Louisiana and adjacent territory, was flooded and the cabbage crop practically wiped out, or at least greatly reduced in quantity. Now, why in the name of all good truck gardeners, should Missourians depend upon Louisiana for cabbages? It has been stated, by no less authority than our own state board of agriculture, that one pound of good cabbage seed will grow a carload of cabbages on practically any cultivable Missouri soil!

"Take a look at our great soft wheat industry. Ninety-four percent of all the wheat grown in the state of Missouri is soft red winter wheat. In the production and distribution of this staple there is employed over three hundred million dollars of capital. Incidentally, this mammoth Missouri industry pays school taxes alone amounting to approximately two and a half million dollars annually.

Bread From Outside Wheat.

"As I have said, Missouri's annual wheat production averages 94 per cent soft red winter wheat. Our flour consumption for the state will aproximate, according to best statistics of the state board of agriculture, about 3,500,000 barrels or seven hundred million pounds annually. More than 75 per cent of this flour consumed by Missouri citizens is made from hard wheat grown in other states.

"Ladies and gentlemen, particularly my Fellow-Misourians, I need not draw any conclusions for you, but I want to state this fact: If even one-half of the wheat bread used on the tables of the three and one half million people of the state of Missouri were Missouri grown soft wheat, it would mean $5,000,000 left in the state that is now spent abroad for a staple that is raised in abundance at home. If we use whenever possible Missouri grown, milled, mined and made products, we keep millions of good hard-earned dollars at home where they will do us the most good.

"The Missouri Association 'For a Greater Missouri' has had a good deal to say about advertising our advantages to the world, but while we are doing it, we are going to put forth some good arguments in the selling of Missouri to Missourians. Too many of our citizens have listened to the high-powered salesmen who are exploiting the attractions of other states, when we have a veritable King's Treasure House right here at home, needing only perhaps a little more good advertising and publicity in order to convince our citizens of its merits.

Need Pride In State.

"The thing we most need is a real state pride and an understanding of our resources and advantages as compared with other regions. We cannot sell others until we have sold ourselves, be the commodity lightning-rods, educational programs, state pride, or soap. Does the advertising of these things pay? It does, most emphatically. Wrigley spends $3,500,000 a year telling folks about chewing gum; Campbells spend $1,500,000 a year exploiting the virtues of just plain soup; Proctor & Gamble believe in their soap products enough to spend $1,170,000 telling the world about them. Ask the first forty people you meet if they can name ten Missouri-Made commodities and it is doubtful if five of them can name even five articles that are made in Missouri. And in the manufacture of many staple articles Missouri leads the world.

"We must have faith also in our citizenry, as well as in what our state produces, ladies and gentlemen, and I am confident that in the great tomorrow of agriculture and industrial Missouri, as a state she will have earned an enviable place among other commonwealths.

"There is a great Missouri booster, or perhaps builder is the more apt word, who is at present sojourning in Europe and who has always the interests of the state at heart wherever his duties may call him. This loyal Missourian will tell you that the economic future of the state is closely bound up in its industrial advancement. Growth of industries go hand in hand with agricultural development and one can hardly prosper without the other.

"In the big industrial expansion program that we now have under way, much good is bound to come to many communities that have been lagging behind in the march of progress. Through intensive economic and industrial surveys in each community, we shall bring to light all of the hidden treasure awaiting development through industry. By industrial development or expansion, we mean turning into dollars the undeveloped assets as represented by all kinds of raw materials in the various sections of the state, and turning into dollars the idle time of unemployed or only part-time employed persons in each community. We want to teach Missourians to look at even the blades of grass in the rich pasture land surrounding their towns as raw materials that they may develop through the dairy industry into a snug bank account. We want to loot the King's Treasure House as represented by Missouri resources, and turn the long hoarded treasure into actual dollar and cents for community upbuilding.

Home Grown Products Best.

"When we have done this, and when we have created a great pride of state and a belief in what we can produce or manufacture here at home, there will be a larger demand for Missouri made commodities and a larger consumption of Missouri grown grains, vegetables and fruits. These last are superlative in quality and Missourians who have strayed into other lands will tell you the same. Last year one hundred and seventy-five gallons of Missouri grown fruits and vegetables were sent from Monroe City, Mo., to Port Arthur, Tex., where they graced the table of a former Monroe County woman who likes the Texas climate but prefers Missouri grown fruits and vegetables.

"On the tip of the extreme southwest corner of the state of Missouri stands a cement marker four feet high, where three states meet. On three sides of the marker where all may read, are these words: Missouri, 1821, Oklahoma, 1907, Arkansas, 1836. In walking around the marker one traverses the soil of the three states mentioned and I have it on the authority of a native son that the climate, the scenery and the people on the Missouri side of it are different—the climate more pleasant; the scenery more beautiful and the people more hospitable. That's what I call honest-to-goodness state loyalty, ladies and gentlemen. If that spirit is present in every citizen of this great commonwealth there is nothing we cannot accomplish in the way of state advancement. The God-given right to be born a Missourian cannot come to all of us, but we can all work together for the building up and advancement of the state, by developing it through educational, agricultur and industry and a constantly growing state pride for actual accomplishments.

"We cannot all be 'Lindbergh's,' and span the ocean within the scope of two days, but we can accomplish as great things for posterity, if we just do the practical things that all thinking people know should be done toward the development of a bigger and better commonwealth. In the words of the small boy, 'let's hop to it.'" dered the present sidewalk removed and barricaded to prevent travel until a new walk can be built.

Unless the walk is rebuilt by the property owners the city will build a new walk and levy special tax bills against the property abutting it, Mayor Garrett said.

The city cannot afford to take any more chances with unsafe walks, Mayor Garrett said. Right now the city is threatened with a suit for damages by a person who claims to have received injuries due to a faulty walk, which was in better shape than the walk that was condemned by the council last night, he said.

This is the second action taken by the council this week to have dangerous sidewalks repaired. The sidewalk on the west side of the old mill site, on Market street from East Second street south to the end of the lot, was declared unsafe and instructions were given by the council to construct a new walk and levy tax bills against the land, the first part of this week.

Mayor Garrett said the council would not stop there. The action last night followed and it will again be repeated, the Mayor said today, unless the property owners who have been asked to repair walks, take sudden action.

What Nodaway County Churches Are Doing

WHEN PETER TOOK A HINT

Comment on the Uniform International Sunday School Lesson for June 12, 1927. Read Acts 12.

Wm. Southern, Jr.

There was one incident in the life of Peter which probably gripped the Christian imagination more strongly than any other of the many of record. It was the escape of the apostle from prison where he had been thrown immediately after Herod had beheaded James.

In Rome not far from the central railway station and near the Appian way is the Church of St. Pietro in Vincola. It was planned by the devoted wife of the Emperor Valentinianus III, to preserve the chains with which St. Peter was bound when in prison. The interior has twenty fluted columns of Imetian marble. At one side is the most marvelous statue in Rome, Michelangelo's Moses, sculptured for the tomb of Julius II, which the pontiff wished to have placed in St. Peter's.

In a sarcophagus in the confessional, and on the altar, there is a tabernacle in bronze containing, according to tradition, some links of the chain which bound St. Peter. In the sacristy between two columns of most rare green serpentine porphyry, is a great painting by a noted artist entitled, "Liberation of Peter from Prison."

Herod Agrippa, a Jew who stood in with the Roman rulers, was a politician. He wanted to curry favor with the powerful Jews in Palestine and receive their support and make himself solid in his position of power, a position which he rather liked and to which was attached many little grafting concessions which made it a very valuable place.

Looking over the situation Herod decided that nothing would make him more solid with the ruling class of the Jews than a persecution of the Christians. He apprehended James who was one of the famous three, Peter, James and John, and had him beheaded. He watched the effect and concluded that it was good and promptly had Peter arrested. His plan was to hold Peter until after the Passover and close the pageants of that time with a notable execution, a sight which would long be remembered.

Peter's friends and following were terrified and disorganized. One leader dead, the most active of the three remaining, in prison. They gathered behind closed doors and wept. Their weeping became prayer. The prayers in agony of soul went up from every heart.

Rhoda, a young woman of the faith, one of those girls who do not get excited and on whom the older persons always depend, was placed at the door. From the account we have the gathering of Christians was not expecting an answer to their prayers. They could see nothing but Peter in chains and the headless body of James.

There came a knocking at the door and Rhoda tip-toed to the barred portal, placed her ear to the key-hole and listened. The knocking was repeated and an impatient voice called for admission. Rhoda recognized Peter's voice. She forgot to open the door, just like a woman, ran back into the room and told them that Peter was at the door. You know Peter's nature, he must have become impatient and almost angry. The door was opened and there was a wonderful reunion. The disciples were not sure that Peter was alive. They thought that he had been killed and that this was his ghost. The belief in ghosts was at that time very prevalent. Even the Christians held on to those old superstitions just as Christians today told on to superstitions of past ages.

The crowd gathered about Peter with exclamations of joy. Peter told them how he had been released from prison. How he had been sleeping between two soldiers, chained to them on either side, when an angel came, his chains fell off, the prison doors opened and he was released and came immediately to them.

Peter's stay was not long with his friends. The death of John and his own arrest and miraculous escape were hints enough for Peter. He concluded Herod did not want him around. He believed he would be preserve miraculously, but he was also of the opinion that he ought to do as much for himself as possible and not try our miracles any oftener than necessary. So Peter packed his traveling kit and skipped out that same night.

Peter lived for about twenty years after this incident, preached in many places and never halted in the work he conceived was his duty. But little more is told of him in the scriptures.

PETER DELIVERED FROM PRISON.
Acts 12: 5-17.

5. Peter therefore was kept in the prison; but prayer was made earnestly of the church unto God for him.

6. And when Herod was about to bring him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains; and guards before the door kept the prison.

7. And behold, an angel of the Lord stood by him, and a light shined in the cell; and he smote Peter on the side, and awoke him, saying, Rise up quickly. And his chains fell from his hands.

8. And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And he did so. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.

9. And he went out, and followed; and he knew not that it was true which was done by the angel, but thought he saw a vision.

10. And when they were past the first and second guard, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth into the city, which opened to them of its own accord; and they went out, and passed on through one street; and straightway the angel departed from him.

11. And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a truth the the Lord hath sent forth his angel and delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12. And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, who surname was Mark; where many were gathered together and were praying.

13. And when he knocked at the door of the gate, a maid came to answer ,named Rhoda.

14. And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for joy, but ran in, and told that Peter stood before the gate.

15. And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she confidently affirmed that it was even so. And they said, It is his angel.

16. But Peter continued knocking; and when they had opened, they saw him, and were amazed.

17. And he, beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him forth out of the prison. And he said, Tell these things unto James ,and the brethern. And he departed and went to another place.

Golden Text.—Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but Jehovah delivereth him out of them all.—Ps. 34: 19.

(Text is from the American Standard Edition of the Revised Bible copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons, and used by permission.)

I would not have you get from this lesson the idea that no matter what you do, where you are, what troubles you are in, earnest prayer will accomplish your release. I would not have you either to doubt the efficacy of prayer and refuse to use the Christian's avenue of appeal to God.

This and many other well authenticated instances testify in the Biole that God does answer prayer. But also that He does it in his own way and time, because He knows what we can not know, whether our prayers should be answered or not. In this case God had twenty years more work for Peter and no Roman chains and guards could hold him. Agrippa was not to have him beheaded.

There are many other cases given where just as earnest prayer was not answered. John the Baptist was beheaded. Jesus himself prayed on the Mount and went from there to his death. Naaman the Syrian, one among many thousand lepers, was healed at the word of the prophet. We may easily pile up the account on both sides.

Most of us know of our own experiences of prayers answered. I have a devoted friend who believes that some twenty years ago as he was standing in his front yard and watching a cyclone approach and praying, the Lord caused the whirling destruction to rise in the air and skip him and his. I am not questioning this incident at all but I would advise you if you see a cyclone coming to pray while you are running your best toward a place of safety, pray that you will get there ahead of the cyclone.

I believe one great essential of prayer to be that it be made unto God and not unto those who may be standing or sitting near you and listening. It seems to me that most of the public prayers I hear are made for the ears of the congregation. They are mostly speeches made in the form of prayers and in a holy sort of tone, different from the natural voice. Why can we not talk with God in our natural tones? I have heard very few who could do so.

Of course the great lesson for us in this story is embodied in the Golden Text which is not found in the New Testament, but in the Psalms, where it testifies the faith of the old Jews of the days before Christ. The Psalmist says "Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but Jehovah delivereth him out of them all." That is the faith I would like to bring to every reader today, the faith in the efficacy of prayer and in the power of God to take care of us under all circumstances.

MOSAIC CODE ADEQUATE YET

TEN COMMANDMENTS AS GOOD AS ON MOUNT SINAI.

WILL OUTLAST CRITICS

"Social Laws Par Excellence" Safeguard Our Rights and Liberties, Says Rabbi.

The following was written for the United Press as a feature of "Ten Commandments Week" in the church by Rabbi Cohn, rated as one of the leading Jews in the United States.

Omaha, Neb., June 10.—The ten commandments are as adequate a code of ethics today as they have been since they were promulgated on Mt. Sinai. They will continue to be, when their shallow and superficial critics are no more.

The commandments are not something artificial or arbitrary, or merely externally imposed by some even divine authority. They are as natural as life itself. What the law of gravitation is to the physical realm, the commandments are to the spiritual and moral realm.

The Mosiac laws deal with the fundamentals of conduct as affecting individuals as members of society. They are therefore the social laws par excellence. Reason and logic establish this as well as so-called "revelation."

Herbert Spencer, the great philosopher, through a rigid, strictly scientific method, deduced from pure thought what are virtually the ten commandments, or at least the ethical position thereof. Each person has a right to the fullest liberty, limited only by the like liberty in others.

From this determination of liberty arises what we call morality, which is restraint, a curb on the regulated license of others. Without it there would be social anarchy, moral chaos. Every man's hand would be raised against his neighbor. The ten commandments safeguard our rights and liberties.

First of these is the right to life. The commandment, "thou shalt not kill" is obvious to all. The home is sacred and the life stream must be kept pure, therefore "Thou shalt not commit adultery."

Man's greatest asset is his good name, his reputation, which has a material value. Hence "thou shalt not bear false witness against they neighbor." The tenth commandment, "Thou shalt not covet," is of special importance in guarding the heart out of which are the issues of life.

I am confident the religion of the future will be the religion of the ten commandments, absolutely the greatest doctrine in the world.

DRAMATIC EVENTS IN BIBLE HISTORY : : By Harlowe R. Hoyt and Walter Scott

The Delivery of Peter

In the year 44, King Herod Agrippa again began to persecute the Christians. At the time of the Passover, he cast Peter into prison under sentence of death.
On the eve of his execution, Peter awoke to find an angel beside him. "Rise and follow me," said the visitor. The chains which bound him to his sleeping guards fell away and Peter followed his rescuer to the city gate, which swung open before them. There the angel disappeared.
Peter made his way to the home of Mark, where the Christians were assembled in prayer. Rhoda, a maid, heard his call and announced his coming.
When the Christians heard Peter's story, they were amazed. "Tell these things unto James and to the brethren," said he. And he hastened on to safety.

DAUGHTERS of MIDAS

By Anne Austin © 1927 by NEA Service Inc.

CHAPTER LII.

"Yeah, my wife!" Eddie Banning snarled. "We got married after that party that this meddling old bird throwed for his flock o' pets, nearly a year ago. The next day when Curtis come across with that fool offer of his to give these three girls a home for a year, she soft-soaped me into keeping my trap shut about us being married the night before. 'N then she goes and double-crosses me after she helps me take the old guy for a cleaning."

T. Q. Curtis passed a bewildered hand over his eyes, then he turned to where Billy was trying to make the unconscious girl comfortable.

"Open the bottom drawer of my desk, Billy. You'll find a flask there and a glass," T. Q. commanded gruffly.

Clay stood guard over the snarling, cursing chauffeur while Nyda was lifted in T. Q.'s arms and placed on the leather-upholstered sofa. Nyda lay for a moment with eyes closed, then began to weep.

"Tell me about it, Nyda," T. Q. said gently, stroking her hand.

"He made me do it," Nyda sobbed. "I've been giving him money all along to keep him from telling you I—was married to him—"

"I don't quite understand, Nyda, how you kept your marriage a secret," T. Q. said gently. "With all the publicity the 'Cinderella girls' have had—"

"Eddie'd had the license for several days," Nyda sobbed. "After the party he—he just made me elope with him. We drove over to Chatham, the county seat, and got married. Nyda Lomax ain't my real name—my legal name. Lomax was my stepfather's name—he and my mother are divorced now—but she married him when I was a little girl and I took his name. My real name was Beulah Owens. I hated the name of Beulah and I just—just made up Nyda, because I thought it was pretty. But our marriage license had my real name on it, to make it legal. After—after you asked me to come here and live, I begged Eddie to help me keep our marriage a secret, and he agreed. He wanted to get all he could out of you, too." She flashed a resentful look at her husband. It was Eddie himself who went over to the county seat and asked the clerk not to let the papers get a record of our marriage. That's all. And I've lived in torment this whole enduring year and I'm glad it's over. I'm glad, glad!" she screamed, beating her breast with a clenched fist.

T. Q. bowed his head on his hands.

"Well," Banning's harsh voice broke in, "you can call your cops now, Curtis. I reckon when a man's own wife squeals on him, he might as well—"

"Nyda didn't squeal on you, Banning," Clay cut in harshly. "I tricked you into a confession. I'm sorry I had to do this, Nyda."

"There won't be an arrest and a trial." T. Q. lifted his head and stared about him. "We've got the stuff back—but that's relatively unimportant—and I feel that I have caused the Banning enough trouble as it is. I'm going to give you a check for a thousand dollars, Nyda, and send you away with your husband. I hope, that in time, you two will be as happy as you had every right to expect before I interfered with your lives. I hope you'll forgive me, my dear." He bent over Nyda, took one of her long, slim hands and raised it to his lips.

"You're good, good, Mr. Curtis!" Nyda sobbed. "I'm sorry I deceived you, and that I—"

"That will do, my dear. You're going to try to forget it all now. Banning, did you throw up your job as chauffeur when you—er—took your trip to Chicago?"

"No, sir." Banning rose, unrestrained by Clay, and took an uncertain step toward T. Q. Curtis. "But I—I guess I'll take Nyda out of this town, Mr. Curtis. I think we'll have a better chance somewhere else." He turned uncertainly toward his wife. "Could you—would you like to leave today, honey?"

An hour later Nyda Lomax Banning left the Curtis home forever. She did not bid T. Q. goodby, for Sawyers, who had undoubtedly listened at the keyhole, told her that the millionaire was closeted in the library with his son. There was no one but Billy to follow Nyda and Eddie Banning to the waiting taxi.

"Goodby, Billy," Nyda choked, flinging her arms about the small, sturdy figure. "I've hated myself for being so mean to you. I—I started to tell T. Q. all about what we've been trying to do this last year—you know—but I—I didn't want to get you in trouble. I've made enough trouble for you already, and I—I'm sorry. I hope you win," she whispered.

His pale face was marked by the tragedy of that struggle.

What passed between father and son in that hour alone in the library was never known to Billy, but when she saw Clay's face as he emerged from the room into the hall she knew that, if T. Q. had pleaded with him to come home, he had resisted that plea. His pale young face, stronger and sterner and far older than it had been a year ago, was marked by the tragedy of that struggle, whatever it had been, but there was no sign of relenting in his steady, somber black eyes.

"I've just told Nyda goodby," Billy whispered huskily, when he joined her in the reception hall. "I—I'd like to talk with you, Clay, if you have time."

"Of course," he answered, the sternness of his face softening to pity for her. "Let's go into the drawing room. Lord, but it looks vast! No wonder you don't want to leave all this. Well, the race narrows down to two. How are you getting along? Just as a sporting proposition, what odds could I get on you to win?"

"Don't Clay!" Billy protested in a strangled voice. "The year is almost over and I'll be glad—as Nyda said. It's been a nightmare of a year. But—" she shivered—"I don't know what's to become of me when it really is over. Just three weeks more, and then—back to clerking for little Billy. How is mother?" she asked abruptly. "I haven't seen her for two weeks. Does she hate me for neglecting her? If I've lost mother, too—"

"Mothers aren't so easy to lose, I imagine," Clay answered lazily, his eyes closed in enjoyment of the hugging comfort of the chair. "Now that you've had your big year, aren't you about ready to fiddle for the public?"

"No," Billy confessed, hurt beyond words at his casualness. "I—I've wasted the year, Clay. I'm just plain—no good. Navratil lost patience with me months ago. Oh, he's still giving me lessons, and I've learned a good deal, I daresay, but—I'm not a genius, Clay—"

"You have no right to say that," Clay interrupted her sternly. "You have the genius all right, but you've buried it under the angel feathers of luxury. I found out that I couldn't have chairs like this"—he struck the arm of the chair a blow which only dented the softness of it—"and all that goes with chairs like this, and amount to anything as a composer. I tried to warn you—"

"I know," she whispered, tears beginning to slip down her cheeks. She had been standing. Suddenly she stooped and lifted his feet from the hassock and sank into a little heap of misery upon it, laying her head on his knees. "You've been—splendid, Clay. And I tried to ruin you. I'll never forget that I tried to make you give it all up, come back—for my sake—"

"Don't cry like that, kidlet," he begged huskily. "I guess I've been too hard on you. I might have helped you to enjoy your year and to keep it from hurting you, this hellish temper of mine got the best of me—"

"I'm trapped, Clay! She sobbed more vehemently because of his sympathy. "I'm spoiled for the other life and now my year here is nearly up. I haven't been happy here but it's ruined my for the old life of penny-pinching poverty. What shall I do, Clay?"

"I'm afraid I don't know," Clay said slowly, his hand settling heavily on her head. "Unless—"

"Unless what?" She raised her head and stared at him.

"I'm going to be disgustingly prosperous," he told her, his mouth twitching with a smile of wry humor. "Next year my royalties on a few silly songs will be sufficient to let me retire for a year, just to write good music. 'The Song of Toil' is almost finished. In fact, I'm taking it to New York next week for a tryout with the Philharmonic Orchestra. The conductor has agreed to play it—"

"I'm awfully glad, Clay," She spoke in a small voice, hope dying within her. "Really awfully glad. You've earned success, if anyone ever did."

"I shall probably live in New York," he went on, his voice casual and careful again. "Great place, New York—great place to study—the violin—"

"Oh!" She dropped her head upon his knees again, and began to tremble.

"I was—just wondering," Clay's carefully controlled voice went on, breaking just a little, "if you're rested up enough after a year of angel feathers to get down to real hard work—in New York—"

"Oh!" she cried again, tears gushing out of her eyes and soaking through the thick tweed cloth that covered his knees.

"Oh!" can mean so much—or so little," Clay laughed shakily. "Just what does it mean, dear? Does it—by any chance—mean that—you want me to put it into plainer words?"

She waited a breatless moment, then nodded, her forehead bumping slowly up and down upon his knees.

"Then—I love you, Billy. God knows I've tried to get over it, but—there it is! I love you and I adore the genius that you've buried, and I want to give both their chance. What do you say, Billy? Do—you—love—me?"

"A telegram for you, Miss Billy!"

She sprang to her feet, dashing at the tears in her eyes with a trembling hand. Sawyers advanced solemnly into the room.

Before Sawyers had reached the door she was tearing open the yellow envelope. Her eyes too kin the words at a glance:

"Arriving Monday five-thirty. Meet me Marquette Hotel for dinner. Important. All my love. Dal."

(To Be Continued.)

With real happiness in her grasp, will Billy throw it over again for the fascinating Dal Romaine?

National Sojourners to Hold Convention

Cleveland, June 10.—Every branch of Uncle Sam's service in all parts of the world will be represented at the seventh annual convention of the Nationaly Sojourners Club, in Cleveland, June 19, 20 and 21.

Membership in this order is limited to Masons holding officers' commissions, past, present or reserve, in some military or naval force of the United States or its World War allies.

This will be the club's first independent convention, the six previous ones having been adjuncts to larger Masonic gatherings.

Though only seven years old, the order has grown so rapidly that it now has 71 chapters, located in virtually every state of the union and most of the insular possessions and almost everywhere the United States maintains a military or naval post.

Major-General Amos A. Fries, chief of the chemical warfare service, is president of the National Sojourners Club.

Editorial, "Ten Years Today," Wins Homer Croy Student Prize

Columbia, Mo., June 10.—Nathan Einhorn of Brooklyn, N. Y., was awarded the Homer Croy Prize at commencement exercises of the University of Missouri, Wednesday. His editorial "Ten Years Today," which appeared in the Columbia Missourian on April 5, 1927, was adjudged the best prose article written by a student in the Missouri School of Journalism, which was published during the past school year.

Honorable mention was given to Richard B. Fowler, of Columbia, Mo., for a feature story on "Edward Price Bell, Artist in Public Affairs;" and to Millard Louis Cope of Delano, Cal., for a news story, "Greetings Between London, England, and Columbia Are Exchanged Over Telephone." These articles appeared in the Missourian. Einhorn also received hoporable mention for a feature story, "Prof. Jesse Wrench, A. B.," which was published in The Forge, a former campus paper.

Prize Winning Editorial.

Einhorn's winning editorial is as follows:

"TEN YEARS TODAY."

It is 10 years today that the United States cast its lot with the Allies against Germany and the Central Powers in the most destructive struggle in all history. The tremendous war to end war has left a trail of bitterness, uncertainty and unrest. Most of the world is debt-ridden. There is sensed a more intense nationalism than ever before. What are conditions now?

The treaty of Versailles has been repeatedly attacked. Historians have come to see that the war guilt is not unequivocally Germany's. The latter country considers itself wronged. And lands which were joined together because of linguistic kinship now find that such an arrangement is not satisfactory unless economic affiliations can be obtained.

The debt problem remains irritably unsolved. The Mellon-Beranger agreement between this country and France has not been ratified at Paris—nor does it seem that it ever will be. Here, opinion appears divided on the question. There can be no doubt that this nation, which emerged from the bloodshed as the financial leader of the world, has come to be feared and disliked by the other Powers.

Germany is beginning to complain against the great burden imposed upon its people and industries by the Dawes plan.

In Nicaragua, Haiti, the Dominican republic, El Salvador and such small nations, we have been accused of the rankest sort of imperalism. From Mexico rises the old charge of "dollar diplomacy" again.

Intriguing In Balkans.

China is a huge seething vat from which things of universal significance may come. The Kuomintang, led by young students, is pushing on to Pekin and to control of the great seaports. Great Britain may lose its vast interests in China but it also deeply concerned with its position in India, where the natives are watching the struggle of the Cantonese Nationalists with keen interest. There can be no doubt but that the West has "lost face" in the eyes of the Orientals as a result of the World War.

In the Balkans there is still the ancient story of intriguing. Jugo Slavia is aligned against Albania and Italy. Russia is resentful because Bessarabia has been awarded to Rumania. France watches Mussolini closely, while the gentleman last named is casting envious eyes at the French colonies in Africa for his "surplus population."

Scientists are predicting a war of chemicals as the next step. The fight will not take place in trenches thousands of miles away, but will obligingly come to one's own front door. There will be no non-combatants; the old and the young will be affected. There will be no poisonous gas which will sweep down from the sky. For this reason France has put through the Parliament a plan which is to organize it men and women, its wealth and the goods of its citizens, so that in time of National peril they will all be instantly mobilized. That country has at last adopted socialism for purpose of war—a most ironical situation.

After 10 years, the struggle to end war seemed to have failed of its purpose.

However, there are more helpful signs. There is the honest effort being made for disarmament by President Coolidge. And there is the League of Nations with its work in the codification of international law, with its endeavors to arrange a better understanding among the various countries, with its work for disarmament and its progress toward the solution of such problems as those of world health, labor and white slavery.

Though private citizens have helped in this, the United States has taken no leading official part. As Dr. Henry Van Dyke, former Minister to the Netherlands, has said: "We have treated world affairs from the standpoint of parochial politics. We have insisted on our dues and dodged our duties."

Scientific inventions have drawn the countries of the earth closer to one another. A policy of splendid isolation has therefore become only a pompous lie. The one way leading from the stupidity of such cataclysms as that of 1914 seems to be a League—such as the one now in existence—possessed of greatly enhanced prestige, whose decisions will be accepted by altercating parties. And this prestige cannot help but come when the United States will realize its own obligations and determine to take upon itself its full responsibility as a great power.

American economic interests are world-wide. If we are to remain at peace, our political activities must be world-wide, too.

A Notary for 44 Years.

E. F. Weller this week received his 12th commission as a notary public. As the commission is for a period of four years, he has already served 44 years, which is probably a record for this county.—Maitland Herald.

GIRLHOOD TO MOTHERHOOD

Iowa Woman Found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Always Helpful

Vinton, Iowa.—"When I was seventeen years old I had to stay at home from school. I finally had to quit school, I was so weak. I suffered for about two years before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, then I picked up one of your books and read it. I began taking the medicine. Now I am a housekeeper with six children, and I have taken it before each one was born. I cannot tell you all the good I have received from it. When I am not as well as can be I take it. I have been doing this for over thirteen years and it always helps me. I read all of your little books I can get and I tell everyone I know what the Vegetable Compound does for me."—Mrs. Frank Sellers, 510 7th Avenue, Vinton, Iowa.

Many girls in the fourth generation are learning through their own personal experiences the beneficial effects of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Mothers who took it when they were young are glad to recommend it to their daughters.

For over half a century, women have praised this reliable medicine.

Pickering

Miss Hildred Hinton came up from St. Joseph the first of the week to spend a few days at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hinton. Miss Hildred is completing this summer, a course in nursing in the M. E. Hospital at St. Joseph where she has been for nearly three years.

Misses Hilda Cline and Ruth Harris of Sheridan accompanied H. G. Harris, editor of the Pickering Post, here last Tuesday when he came over in the interest of the paper.

C. G. McMillen, recently appointed acting postmaster at this office, underwent an operation for appendicitis at the hospital in Maryville last Friday and is getting along as well as can be expected, but it will be several days before he can be brought home. Mrs. Agnes Lunte is in charge of the Post Office during the illness of Mr. McMillen.

Mr. McMillen's daughter, Miss Ora McMillen, who is at the head of the Home Economics Department of the Topeka, Kan., Schools, and her sister, Mrs. C. A. Chaney and her two daughters, arived here last Saturday to be with him during his illness, and for a visit with the family of their sister, Mrs. B. M. Hanna and Mr. Hanna and other relatives here.

J. N. Sadler underwent an operation at the St. Francis Hospital the first of this week and at last report was getting along in a very satisfactory way. His son, H. J. Sadler and his brother Frank Sadler both of St. Joseph came up to visit him on Wednesday.

The news of the death of Mrs. M. A. Lawson of Long Branch neighborhood who passed away at Portland, Oregon, where she was visiting relatives, was a great shock to her many friends and acquaintances. Mrs. Lawson had been in Washington and Oregon at the homes of two sons and a daughter since last fall and had been planning to come home in July. She had been in good health while on her trip and her passing was very sudden. A host of friends sympathize with her family in their bereavement.

A number of Pickering folks went to Shenandoah last Sunday to visit the flower show and other attractions in that city. Among those making the trip were Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Johnson and son, Donald, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Swinford, jr., and daughter, Jean, Mrs. Agnes Lunte and daughters, Misses Huldah and Ruth, Miss Josie Sadler, Mrs. C. A. Wolfers and daughter Miss Mary Wolfers.

France and England Observe 900th Anniversary of Hastings

Hastings, Eng., June 10.—Scene of the battle which 861 years ago became one of the turning points in England's history, Hastings today joined with France in the celebrations of the 900th anniversary of the birth of William the Conqueror.

Eight French mayors will be the guests of the municipality during the next three days of festivities in honor of "Guillaume de Conquerant." The visitors will be feted during their stay and will be given every opportunity to visit places of historic interest in the vicinity, and particularly the ancient Castle and Battle Abbey.

Although the original scheme for the celebrations called for an extensive pageant, in which the French visitors were to arrive in a boat of the period and be escorted to the Castle grounds by a guard of honor, it is understood that the expenses attached to such a plan caused it to be abandoned. It had also been proposed to re-enact the Battle on the ground to which William marched after landing at Pevensey, but this plan was also abandoned due to the expense attached to such a comprehensive program.

On July 3rd, the Mayor of Hastings and several officials of the municipality will cross the Channel to participate in the French celebrations which will be held in various cities and towns along the coast.

Thousands of self-styled British descendants of William the Conqueror's barons, knights and men-at-arms have already applied to take part in the elaborate festivities, which will take place at Falaise, France, the Conqueror's birthplace.

A procession representing William proceeding in state through the streets of his native town will be held with great pomp and ceremony and during the evenings the old castle there will be illuminated.

Several days later similar celebrations will be held at Caen, where William lies buried and at Dives-sur-Mer whence his armada sailed.

According to historians, Wiliam was a love child of Duke Robert known as the Devil of Normandy and a tanner's daughter named Arlette. It is said that Robert was very fond of his son and when William was seven he decided to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem to be cleansed of his sins.

The people of Normandy protested at "being left without a leader" and a delegation waited upon the Duke and begged him not to go.

"By my faith, sirs," William is said to have replied: "I will not leave you without a seigneur. I have a little love child who will grow, and, if please God, he will mend."

Duke Robert made the trip and died while returning.

Many attempts were made to kidnap and assassinate the young Duke William. A group of frenzied plotters even once reached his bedroom door and his life was saved by his mother's brother who escaped with the boy in his arms to a nearby poor man's home.

Historians also contended that William had something of a claim to the throne of England since Edward the Confessor, having no heir, had promised the Duke of Normandy.

Much Liquor Used by Thirsty Americans

Estimated Consumption Is at Least 250,000 Gallons Since Prohibition, Treasury Says.

Washington, June 10.—Thirsty Americans have consumed a quarter of a million gallons or more of intoxicating liquors since prohibition went into effect, it was estimated at the United States treasury recently.

The greater part of this amount was described by federal authorities as illegal under strict interpetation of the Volstead act but in many instances was strictly proper.

Sacramental wine consumption, entirely legal, totaled more than 24,000,000 gallons, and it is estimated home made wine consumption was many times more.

Some 30,000,000 gallons of whiskey have been released from bonded warehouses for medical use during the period. Government men estimated moonshine consumption is at lease several million annually.

Liquor smuggled in has been considerable, especially from Canada. It is estimated that about 11,000,000 gallons of various liquors comes from this source each year.

Beer production and consumption were tremendous until last year when the brewery supervising squad under Secretary Andrews virtually plugged this bootleg leak. When supervision became close, shot beer immediately took its place.

Prohibition authorities insist that conditions are steadily improving with bootleg supply diminishing and in many instances the thirsty lose their taste for intoxicants because of the poor quality of liquor on the illicit market.

They point out that there is now about one chance in every 2,000 of obtaining a genuine bottle of liquor from a bootlegger and that while the concoctions sold are not always poisonous they are far from palatable.

Osages to Be Hosts to Indian Congress

Pawhuska, Okla., June 10.—The tribe of the Osage, once the most warlike and now the wealthiest of the American Indians will this year be host to hand around the peace pipe and prepare the barbecue for its brothers.

For the Osages bring to Pawhuska, June 13, 14 and 15 the fourth annual convention of the Indian congress, the continental conclave of the red men.

Commemorating the fifty first anniversary of the burying of the hatchet by Chiefs Call and Sitting Bull following Custers massacre in the valley of the Little Big Horn, S. D., all Indian nations of North America will again sit in peace.

They will assemble at the historical Indian camp grounds near Pawhuska, capital of the Osage to revive traditions and recall again tribal prowess. From Washington will come white men bearing assurance that the great white father recalls well the rising sun of peace of 50 pears ago. Congressmen, veteran friends of the Indians and principals of the represented tribes will renew that pledge.

The wealth of the Osage will not be stinted it is promised, in making the pow-wow, the greatest of its kind. Fred Lookout, principal of the Osages and Chief Bacon Hind, Osage orator and philosopher, ably supported by their people, give these assurances.

An airdrome must be square in shape, points out Capt. Elliott White Springs, noted aviator, in an article in this week's Liberty, because a plane in taking off from the ground must be faced into the wind, to prevent side pressure turning it over.

Three kings have been invited to attend the Chicago centennial in 1933, according to the committee. The kings, not being so busy these days, probably can find time.

Closing Grain Review.

Chicago, June 10.—The opening in wheat on the Chicago board of trade today was attended by considerable excitement, with prices jumping 3⅛ to 4⅛ cents. The bullish government report excited Liverpool advance called for heavy buying.

Although profit taking increased on the advance, wheat closed ¾ cent higher than yesterday. The cash market was steady to 1 cent higher.

Corn advanced at the start in sympathy with wheat but the strength in the latter was taken advantage of to sell large amounts of corn, and prices dropped sharply. Corn closed 3⅜ to 4⅜ cents lower, with the cash market 2 cents off.

Oats moved up a little with corn, but also reacted. Oats closed ⅝ to 1 cent lower, with the cash market unchanged.

Provisions were strong.

LINDBERGH IN NIGHT DROPS

TWICE, IN PITCH DARKNESS, HE LEAVES PLANE IN AIR.

PARACHUTES SAVE HIM

Once Speeding Machine Pursues Him, Another Time He Lands On Barbed Wire Fence.

By MORRIS DE HAVEN TRACY
(Copyright, 1927, by the Uited Press).

During the winter of 1925-26 Charles A. Lindbergh, flying night after night through rain, snow and sleet, twice saved his life by dropping in parachutes from his disabled planes, making descents which stand among the most remarkable adventures in aviation.

One one occasion his plane circled five times close to his parachute, once coming within 300 yards of it, threatening each time to collide as it paralleled his descent.

On another occasion he came down first through snow and then through rain, to alight across a barbed wire fence while the wind pulled away at his parachute threatening injury. But Lindbergh was not as much as scratched.

That winter probably stands next to the Spring of 1927, when Lindbergh flew to Paris, as the most thrilling of his life.

It was on the night of September, 16, 1925, that Lindbergh took off from Lambert Field, St. Louis, with the night mail for Chicago. Twenty miles beyond Peoria, Ill., he encountered darkness and a blanket of fog began to cover the ground. By the time Marseilles, Ill., was passed this fog blanket from an altitude of 600 feet entirely obscured the earth. He attempted to fly under it, but could not, and a flare which he dropped hoping to determine a safe landing place by its light, failed to work. He proceeded on to the Maywood flying field, the air-mail station for Chicago, but the fog was so thick he could not locate it. He then set out to pick up, if he could, the beacons of the Transcontinental air route, but this also was impossible.

Parachute Last Resort.

At last his fuel ran low. He had enough left for seven minutes flying. There was nothing left for him to do but to abandon his plane in the parachute—although he could not see the ground.

"At 5,000 feet the engine sputtered and died," Lindbergh wrote in his official report of what was to him merely an incident in the life of a flier.

"I stepped up on the cowling and out over the right side of the cockpit, pulling the rip cord after about a 100-foot fall. I was falling head downward when the risers jerked me into an upright position and the chute opened. This time I saved the rip cord.

"I pulled the flashlight from my belt and was playing it down toward the top of the fog when I heard the plane's engine pick up. When I jumped it had practically stopped dead and I had neglected to cut the switches. Apparently when the ship nosed down an additional supply of gasoline drained to the carburetor. Soon she came into sight about a quarter of a mile away headed in the general direction of my parachute.

"I put the flashlight in a pocket of my flying suit preparatory to slipping the parachute out of the way, if necessary. The plane was making a left spiral of about a mile diameter and passed approximately 300 yards away from my 'chute, leaving me on the outside of the circle.

Plane In View Five Times.

"I was undecided as to whether the plane or I was descending the more rapidly and glided my chute away from the spiral path of the ship as rapidly as I could.

"The ship passed completely out of sight, but reappeared again in a few seconds, its rate of descent being about the same as that of the parachute.

"I counted five spirals, each one a little further away than the last, before reaching the top of the fog bank. When I settled into the fog I knew that the ground was within 1,000 feet and reached for the flashlight, but found it to be missing. I could see neither earth nor stars and had no idea what kind of territory was below. I crossed my legs to keep from straddling a branch or wire, guarded my face with my hands and waited.

"Presently I saw the outline of the ground and a moment later was down in a cornfield."

Lindbergh was unhurt. He found the wreckage of his plane two miles away.

Lindbergh's next and his last drop from a plane by parachute was on the night of November 3, 1925.

Near Peoria, Ill., he encountered snow and although he descended to an altitude of only 200 feet, could not see the ground. He circled and explored, looking for a spot where the weather might be favorable for a landing, for more than an hour. But shortage of fuel forced a crisis.

Jumps From Above Clouds.

Of this Lindbergh wrote:

"When about 10 minutes gas remained in the pressure tanks and stiff I could not see the faintest outline of any object on the ground, I decided to leave the ship rather than attempt to land blindly. I turned back southwest toward less populated country and started climbing in an attempt to get over the clouds before jumping. The main tank went dry at 7:51 and the reserve at 8:10 p. m. The altimeter then registered approximately 14,000 feet, yet the top of the clouds apparently was several thousand feet higher.

"I rolled the stabilizer, cut the switches, pulled the ship up into a stall and was about to go out over the right side of the cockpit when the right wing began to drop. In this position the plane would gather speed and spiral to the right, possibly striking my parachute after its first turn. I returned to the controls and after righting the plane dove over the left side of the cockpit while the airspeed registered about 70 miles per hour and the altimeter 13,000 feet. I pulled the rip cord immediately after clearing the stabilizer. I had left the ship head first and was falling in that position when the risers whipped me around into an upright position and the chute opened. The last I saw or heard of the plane was as it disappeared into the clouds just after my chute opened. I placed the rip cord in my pocket and took out my flashlight.

"It was snowing and very cold. For the first minute or so the parachute descended smoothly, then commenced an excessive oscillation which continued for about five minutes and which I was unable to check.

Lands On Barbed Wire.

"The first indication that I was near ground was a gradual darkening of the space below. The snow had turned to rain and although my chute was thoroughly soaked, its oscillation had greatly decreased. I directed the beam of the 500-foot spotlight downward but the ground appeared so suddenly that I landed directly on top of a barbed wire fence without seeing it. The fence helped to break my fall and the barbs did not penetrate my heavy flying suit. The chute was blown over the fence and was held open for some time by the gusts of wind before collapsing."

Lindbergh folded his parachute and started in search of his plane. He was unable to find it until the next day when he located it from another plane, within a quarter of a mile of the place where he landed.

None of these experiences seemed to daunt Lindbergh. He said little regarding them. They gained slight attention, compared to their dramatic qualities. He would come in from a night of fighting the winter storms, burst into the cottage where he and his companion fliers lived, and turn himself to reading on scientific subjects, to practical jokes or a demand for food.

He was a hearty eater. A small steak and two or even more eggs formed his favorite breakfast. Louis de Haatre, who runs the lunch place near Lambert Field, St. Louis, considered him one of his best customers, particularly for "hot dogs."

"I just can't imagine 'Slim' Lindbergh being any different after all this fame," mused de Haatre recently, "but I suppose it is bound to change him some."

Columbia Flight Ends in Marsh

Forced to land in a marsh at Kottbus, Germany, with a broken propellor, the Wright-Bellanca monoplane, Columbia, is pictured above after the dangerous landing had been made and the plane dragged out of a swamp. A German machanic is standing in front of the plane, while two citizens managed to edge in as the picture was being taken.
